

The internet has created a landscape ripe for innovative forms of social media in recent years. Both individuals and organizations use this platform to share information, events, and happenings with the community and their connected members.

Twitter is an internet social medium with aspects of both mass and interpersonal communication. It is more commonly known as a "microblog" - a platform for publishing and sharing short (140 characters or less) messages with others within a user's social network. These short messages are called "tweets". With the tweets, you can also share relevant images, graphics, and video media files with your post on the network. Twitter is a real-time information network that connects you to the latest stories, ideas, opinions, and news about what you find interesting. Tweeting allows you to share your views, participate in live debates, and contribute your voice to conversations as they happen.

Anyone with an internet connection or a mobile phone can use Twitter through a web browser, and a variety of mobile and desktop applications.
