Focus on Understanding World History Themes

History classes in school sometimes have a bad reputation for teaching students only about long lists of dates and names. However, that reputation does not apply to the AP World History exam.

If you look at the kinds of questions you will face on this exam, you will find that they do not emphasize remembering specific names or dates. Instead, they emphasize a general understanding of the themes of history. That means understanding how history evolved over time and how certain dynamics in history affected other dynamics.

You must understand this focus so you know what to pay extra attention to as you go through your study materials.

Get Better at Writing Fast for AP Exams

Having the right knowledge is only part of succeeding on the AP World History exam. You will also want to train in a few specific skills, including writing, as quickly as possible. Because the AP World History exam is timed, people who can write faster have an advantage over those who write more slowly.

The good news is that learning how to write faster is as simple as putting in some practice. All you have to do is set a timer and see how many words you can write before it goes off. If you do this many times over a few days or weeks, you will find that your writing becomes smoother and faster.

That will give you extra time to consider your answers when it comes time to take this exam.

Develop a Multiple-Choice Answer Rhythm

There is an important balance between speed and reflection you will want to achieve as you take the AP World History exam. During the multiple-choice section of the test, you will need to answer questions at a rate of about one per minute.

Set a timer to go off every minute and run through a bunch of world history multiple-choice questions. This will help you get a feel for how fast you will need to be moving come test day.

Ask For Help Studying for Tests

The good news is that you can probably find people who will help you with both aspects of your test preparation. Find family or friends to listen to your ideas about creating a study plan. Then, ask them for advice and make any adjustments to your plan accordingly.

You might also want to find people to study alongside you to help you stay motivated and on track. You can also ask your study buddy to notice any distractions that seem to be keeping you from making effective use of your study time.
