

Did you know that the typical veterinarian makes around one hundred thousand dollars per year?

Becoming a veterinarian is a challenging, but rewarding career path. It requires a combination of education, experience, and a genuine passion for animal care.

Once you start working as a veterinarian, not only will you be able to make a lot of money. You will also have the chance to make a positive impact on the lives of people and animals.

To help you understand what it takes to become a veterinarian, we have put together a guide. Keep reading to find out more.

Complete Your Undergraduate Studies

Completing an undergraduate degree is an important step in preparing for veterinary school.

Many veterinary programs require applicants to have a strong background in science, including courses in biology, chemistry, and physics.

Get Real World Experience

Most people who apply to veterinary school first take time to get real-world experience. This might include spending time at a veterinary clinic, job shadowing, completing internships, and interviewing other veterinarians.

Apply to Veterinary Programs

Applying to veterinary programs can be a competitive and rigorous process. Before applying, make sure to research the different types of veterinarians and the specialties that they practice.

This will help you to identify which programs align with your interests and career goals.

The application process may include interviews, and you may also have to take a standardized test like the Graduate Record Examination (GRE).

Obtain Your DVM

Obtaining a Doctor of Veterinary Medicine (DVM) degree is the final step in becoming a veterinarian.

The DVM program typically takes four years to complete and includes both classroom instruction and hands-on clinical experience.

The curriculum covers a wide range of topics. This includes anatomy, physiology, pharmacology, and surgery.

You will also have the opportunity to learn about different types of animals and the various medical conditions that they can develop.

Pass the NAVLE

The most important test for becoming a veterinarian is the NAVLE. You will need to get a passing score if you want to become a veterinarian. It is possible to take this exam in the fall or spring of your final year of school.

Begin Your Career

Some graduates may choose to join an established veterinary business. Others might consider starting a business of their own.

Regardless of which path you choose, you'll need to have a strong understanding of veterinary business operations. This is why veterinary client communication is a crucial aspect of the job.

You will need to effectively communicate with clients and their pets to provide the best possible care.

Becoming a Veterinarian

If you are interested in becoming a veterinarian, keep in mind that you'll need to first obtain your DVM. You also need to pass the NAVLE.

Do you want to find out more about starting a veterinary business? If so, make sure to check out the pets and animals section of our website.